

Red Army

Soviet history

Print

Cite

Share

More

BY The Editors of Encyclopaedia Britannica View Edit History

FULL ARTICLE

Red Army, Russian Krasnaya Armiya, Soviet army created by the Communist government after the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917. The name Red Army was abandoned in 1946.

Red Army flag

A typical Red Army flag of World War II. The lettering on the obverse side translates “158th Fighter Aircraft Regiment,” while the reverse side has “For Our Soviet” at the upper end and “Fatherland” below.

Red Army

See all media

Date: 1918 - 1946

Areas Of Involvement: Land warfare

Related People: Oleg Vladimirovich Penkovsky • Mikhail Tukhachevsky

at the upper end and Fatherland below.

The Russian imperial army and navy, together with other imperial institutions of tsarist Russia, disintegrated after the outbreak of the Russian Revolution of 1917. By a decree of January 28 (January 15, Old Style), 1918, the Council of People's Commissars created a Workers' and Peasants' Red Army on a voluntary basis. The first units, fighting with a revolutionary fervour, distinguished themselves against the Germans at Narva and Pskov on February 23, 1918, which became Soviet Army Day. On April 22, 1918, the Soviet government decreed compulsory military training for workers and peasants who did not employ hired labour, and this was the beginning of the Red Army. Its founder was Leon Trotsky, people's commissar for war from March 1918 until he lost the post in November 1924.

Leon Trotsky

Leon Trotsky reviewing troops of the Red Guard c. 1918.

Image: Bain News Service/Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. (LC-DIG-ggbain-33302)

The Red Army was recruited exclusively from among workers and peasants and immediately faced the problem of creating a competent and reliable officers' corps immediately faced the problem of creating a competent and reliable officers' corps. Trotsky met this problem by mobilizing former officers of the imperial army. Up to 1921 about 50,000 such officers served in the Red Army and with but few exceptions remained loyal to the Soviet regime. Political advisers called commissars were attached to all army units to watch over the reliability of officers and to carry out political propaganda among the troops. As the Russian Civil War continued, the short-term officers' training schools began to turn out young officers who were regarded as more reliable politically.

The number of Communist Party members increased among the Red Army's ranks from

RED ARMY

ARTICLE

Introduction & Quick Facts

MOREOVER, all commanders were graduates of Soviet military academies and officers training schools, admission to which was limited to those recommended by the Communist Party.

Get a Britannica Premium subscription and gain access to exclusive content.

Subscribe Now

 MEDIA

 ADDITIONAL INFO

Examine how Stalin's Red Army defeated Hitler's Fourth and Sixth armies in the Battle of Stalingrad

In the Battle of Stalingrad (1942–43), the advancing Germans were finally stopped by the Red Army in desperate house-to-house fighting. From The Second World War: Allied Victory (1963), a documentary by Encyclopædia Britannica Educational Corporation.

Image: Encyclopædia Britannica, Inc.

See all videos for this article

In May 1937 a drastic purge, affecting all potential opponents of Joseph Stalin's leadership, decimated the officer corps and greatly reduced the morale and efficiency of the Red Army. On June 12, Mikhail Nikolayevich Tukhachevsky, first deputy people's commissar of war, and seven other Red Army generals were found guilty of plotting to betray the Soviet Union to Japan and Germany, and all were shot. Many other generals and colonels were either cashiered or sent to forced-labour camps, or both. The purge's effects were apparent in the serious defeats suffered by the Red Army during the first months of the German invasion (1941), but a corps of younger commanders soon emerged to lead the Soviet Union to victory in World War II.

Siege of Leningrad

Soviet Red Army soldiers crossing an area of fortified defenses with barbed wire during the Siege of Leningrad, c. 1941-43.

Image: Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. (LC-USZ62-25900)

By war's end the Soviet armed forces numbered 11,365,000 officers and men.

Demobilization, however, started toward the end of 1945, and in a few years the armed forces fell to fewer than 3,000,000 troops.

Red Army; Operation Barbarossa

Two Red Army medics preparing to retrieve a wounded soldier, September 12, 1941.

Image: Encyclopædia Britannica, Inc.

In 1946 the word Red was removed from the name of the armed forces. Thus, a Soviet soldier, hitherto known as a krasnoarmiich (“Red Army man”), was subsequently called simply a ryadovoy (“ranker”). Discipline in the Soviet forces was always strict and punishments severe; during World War II, penal battalions were given suicidal tasks. In 1960, however, new regulations were introduced making discipline, and certainly punishments, less severe. Officers were to use more persuasion and were charged with developing their troops’ political consciousness, thus ending the dual control of military commanders and political commissars. By contrast, enlisted men increasingly brutalized each other; conscripts with longer service took advantage of new recruits, and ethnic communities worked out mutual hostilities in the barracks. The era of the revolutionary “Red Army” ended, in fact as well as in name, long before the final disappearance of the Soviet Union. In Russia, February 23, now known as Defender of the Fatherland Day, is still the official day to honour military veterans.

■ The Editors of Encyclopaedia Britannica

■ This article was most recently revised and updated by Michael Ray, Editor.

Learn More in these related Britannica articles:

Russia: The Civil War

The Red Army was formed in February 1918, and Trotsky became its leader. He was to reveal great leadership and military skill, fashioning a rabble into a formidable fighting force. The Reds were opposed by the “Whites,” anticommunists led by former imperial officers. There were also...

World War II: The Baltic states and the Russo-Finnish War, 1939–40

On February 1, 1940, the Red Army launched 14 divisions into a major assault on the Mannerheim Line. The offensive's weight was concentrated along a 10-mile sector of the line near Summa, which was pounded by a tremendous artillery bombardment. As the fortifications were pulverized, tanks and sledge-carried Soviet Union: The Civil War and the creation of the U.S.S.R.

...the military conflict between the Red Army and various "White" armies formed on the periphery of Soviet Russia for the purpose of overthrowing the communists. Both wars went on concurrently. The struggle against domestic opponents was to prove even more costly in human lives and more threatening to the new...

HISTORY AT YOUR FINGERTIPS

Sign up here to see what happened On This Day, every day in your inbox!

Sign Up

By signing up, you agree to our Privacy Notice.

